Q: jquery selectors for multiple top level elements I have the following HTML in my web app that will have several unique top level elements (in this case headers): log in register log in register I need to grab all the a elements, but only the one with the specific title. If I use this it will grab both of the a elements $('header a[title="log in"]'); In this case, what is the best way to grab the "log in" a element only? A: Use the :contains selector to match elements that contain the text you're looking for (i.e. the :contains(...) selector). $('header a[title="log in"]:contains("log in")'); Note that :contains() searches for text within the element itself (not within any descendants) so it would miss the title attribute if the anchors were contained in other tags such as a span: log in register Six different color shades of champagne champagne with gold accents, this is a beautiful watch for the special occasions and celebrations.
