Lung-volume reduction surgery (LVRS) has become an accepted treatment for severe emphysema in humans. The aim of this study was to evaluate the feasibility of LVRS for emphysema in the small animal model. In 11 pigs, emphysema was induced by intratracheal instillation of porcine pancreatic elastase (PPE) into saline. LVRS was performed by bilateral resection of approximately 30% of the lung tissue. The excised lung tissue was removed in an endobronchial manner by using bronchoscopic techniques. The animals were evaluated by pulmonary function tests and were killed at 6, 12, and 24 weeks after LVRS. Gross and histologic examination of lung sections were performed. The average residual lung volume decreased from 30 82157476af
